Greetings. I recently bought one of your lower receivers and so far I'm liking it but I need to modify it for some sling points. Is there any way I could be sent a picture of one of the receiver halves' insides before they're welded together? I understand any modification like this wouldn't be covered under your warranty but I'm not planning on doing anything crazy and this is for personal use only. I tried finding pictures online of a receiver that split or something but lo and behold there don't seem to be pictures everywhere of your receivers failing regardless of what the rumor mill says about polymer. Thanks! - Kenneth King

PLEASE NOTE: If you purchased a firearm, such as a lower receiver, rifle or handgun, it's your responsibility to have your local Federal Firearms Licensed dealer forward to us a copy of their FFL.

Please contact your dealer and have them fax or email a copy of their FFL. We cannot ship a firearm until we have a copy of their FFL on file. The FFL should be sent by FAX to 866-941-8792 or by EMAIL to sales@gwacsarmory.com.

That is absolutely what I was looking for. Thank you very much! Have you guys thought about making a second generation lower? I know InRange's What Would Stoner Do project has really pushed the popularity of your receivers.. While they're pretty good as is there are definitely some small things I would change. The biggest one being the grip reach to the safety and magazine release. I know it was made like that to give more support to the stock meeting area at the back of the FCG cavity but you could push the grip forward a bit if you made that whole area just wider/thicker out to the sides. You could even incorporate this modification into having QD socket or other sling mounting points. Thanks again! - Kenneth
